Account of Incident:

Cantoneros was on board a motorcycle, on his way home, when shot by two men. He sustained seven gunshot wounds.

The broadcaster had received death threats, some through cell phone text messages, which he read on the air, colleagues said.

Police said when they rushed to the scene, they found the critically wounded Cantoneros clutching his own .45 caliber pistol. He apparently was able to fire back at the assailants, based on bullet shells found near him, police investigators said.

Cantoneros' colleague, Robert Baguio, said Cantoneros identified his assailants to investigators before undergoing surgery at the Dipolog Medical Center. He died at 11pm the same day.

Suspect Robert Woo, 32, was arrested on Sept. 14, 2005 September, with the help of an unnamed witness who identified him as among the three men who tailed Cantoneros moments before the journalist was gunned down.

Another witness also pointed to Woo as one of several men who followed Cantoneros inside a local restaurant on the evening of 3 May, just a couple of hours before the incident took place.

Woo denied his involvement in the killing.

Woo was a member of Task Force Lupad, an anti-crime group under the local government of Dapitan City, whose mayor is Romeo Jalosjos.

A criminal case of Murder Qualified by Treachery, Evident Premeditation and Abuse of Superior Strength was filed against Woo and two unidentified persons at the RTC Branch 6 of Dipolog.

Trial is ongoing.
